Scones With Jam And Clotted Cream

▶ 1/5

TEA PARTY

Contrary to the common understanding seeping from this quarter of the world, 'High Tea' usually refers to a working class meal in the evening akin to dinner. The ritualistic sipping of tea with a spot of scones and dainties widely accredited to the Duchess of Bedford should be correctly addressed as 'Afternoon Tea'.

At the historic Eastern and Oriental Hotel the affair of tea takes on a heightened seriousness even decades after the colonial yoke was lifted. Gentlemen are expected to call on the parlour in proper slacks with the attending ladies elegantly attired as well. Upon being seated by smart looking attendants, a choice of tea rendered would be followed by 2 tiers of scones and savouries and a plate of desserts. Polite conversation would ensue and all would be well within the expanse of Her Majesty's unfailing empire.

For the scrumptious scones accompanied by homemade jam and clotted cream that could hold their own against any British made counterparts I would gladly immerse in these bygone civilities.

The E&O is after all a colonial relic capable of conjuring up quite a few ghosts of the past and afternoon tea at 1885 will suffice as delicious appeasements.
